

Read, listen, and complete.

Exercise 1 – Order the sentences to create the scripts.

So, without further ado, here's the first stereotype...		I'll go through some of the most common ones, and then I'll give my opinion about how accurate they actually are.		So today I'm going to talk about stereotypes.	1
To me, it's kind of funny, because I'm not rich, not even close, yet I get treated like this all the time.		The average American is definitely better off than the average person from most other countries.		The next one is that Americans don't know much about the rest of the world.
It usually isn't a big issue, but sometimes, you get the feeling that people are looking at you with dollar signs in their eyes.		So, I think it'd be better if I focused on stereotypes about Americans rather than stereotypes about people from other countries.		To an extent, though, this stereotype has some general truth to it.
A stereotype is an idea or image about a group of people that might be true, but it might also be a little oversimplified.		This stereotype definitely has some truth to it...		Americans are rich. This is a stereotype that practically every American will face at some point if they spend a significant time abroad.
Obviously, there are many Americans who are knowledgeable about other countries...		As an American who's lived abroad for years, I can tell you first hand that this stereotype is strong, no doubt.		So, this stereotype's complicated.
Some might even use the word "ignorant" when describing the average Americans' knowledge about things like names and languages of other countries.		This is a topic that a lot of us might find pretty funny, but some people might also get offended when this topic comes up.		My intention with this video is definitely not offend any of you.

Exercise 2 – True or False? Listen carefully and answer.

- Many Americans probably think that Brazilians speak Spanish.
- People from other countries know about many countries.
- People aren't interested in Geography.
- A workaholic is someone addicted to shopping.
- Americans work a lot and work pretty hard.

---

---

---

---

---